PRE-LOVED

FROM A CONSUMER SOCIETY TO A CIRCULAR SOCIETY

Transmission has always been a core value in the art of crafting beautiful things, be they cars, property or luxury objects. In the real estate sector, for example, 83% of transactions concern second-hand properties, a clear indication of our inherent attachment to beauty and heritage. The word “pre-loved”, so charged with emotion, wonderfully conveys the sentimental bond we have with the objects we pass on.

It is only natural then that this process be embraced in the luxury sphere, where second-hand embodies deeply rooted values: the search for meaning, for history, and the value of objects. What do a château, villa, city centre apartment, collector’s watch, precious piece of jewellery, classic car and work of art have in common? They are all exceptional items, symbols of eternity, that we have a desire to preserve and pass on to others.

Circularity in the luxury sector is no mere trend, it’s an obligation. Because luxury, through its innate values – quality, durability, repairability, heritage – is starting to reinvent the life cycle of products. Together, we have the power to adopt a new way of consuming and envision a future in which luxury is synonymous with long-lasting, savoir-faire and excellence.

It is this undertaking that laid the foundations for the ReLuxury & BARNES Pre-Loved Luxury Show, in Paris. This trade fair, featuring exhibition spaces, talks and workshops, offers an all-embracing vision of the pre-loved luxury market and its related services.

Join us in championing circular luxury!

LUXURY & CIRCULARITY AND SECOND-HAND PROPERTIES

EBAY, THE MAIN PARTNER OF THE RELUXURY SHOW, HAS NOTICED INCREASED INTEREST IN SHOPPING PRE-LOVED FASHION AND LUXURY ON THE PLATFORM

Since its launch, eBay has championed the circular economy, with fashion enthusiasts turning to the platform to acquire pre-loved fashion and luxury items. In recent years, eBay has invested in making it easier for brands sellers and buyers across its luxury categories to participate in the circular economy. The platform has consistently improved trust in fashion buying and selling through solutions such as eBay Authenticity Guarantee, eBay consignment, and selling items direct from brand across a variety of fashion and luxury categories, giving users confidence in every transaction.

Among all the clothing, shoes, and accessories sold on eBay worldwide last year, 39% of those items were second-hand, totaling 55 million items.

Sellers using eBay's consignment option see higher final sale prices than similar items listed traditionally on eBay. For example, a small quilted Chanel 19 bag (consigned through the new service in December) exceeded the average sale price of all other similar bags sold on eBay last year by more than 45%.

Comparing 2022 to 2023, the number of listings globally on eBay for second-hand bags and shirts increased by double digits. In June 2024, global searches on eBay for «pre-loved luxury» increased by more than 40% compared to June 2023. Also, in June 2024, eBay users worldwide searched for “vintage” more than 1,000 times per minute on average. Globally on the platform, the number of clothing, shoes, and accessories sold with «thrifty» in the description increased by more than 400% in March 2024 compared to March 2023.

As preference for shopping pre-loved continues to gain momentum, eBay is focused on supporting industry events like the ReLuxury show that help educate, and improve, and drive access to the circular economy.

Nearly half of surveyed consumers agree: “Buying second-hand items is trendy in 2024.”

THE SECOND-HAND PROPERTY MARKET IN REAL ESTATE TODAY (Source: notaires.fr)

The European renovation market is in the throes of expansion, now accounting for 60% of total investment in the building sector. In Europe, 80% of real estate transactions concern second-hand properties.

In France in 2023, over 1 million transactions involving second-hand homes were recorded, pointing to a sharp increase in the interest in property assets. On the other hand, the new-build market is struggling: building permits fell drastically, 23.7% down in 2023 on the previous year.

Investment in renovation has become a necessity. In 2023, approximately €250 billion euro was invested in building renovation in Europe, the equivalent of about 1% of Europe's GDP. The European Commission has launched initiatives like the Renovation Wave, which aims to renovate 35 million buildings by 2030 in a bid to improve their energy efficiency and reduce their carbon emissions. Retrofitting an existing building can lower its carbon footprint by 50-75% compared to an equivalent new build.

Globally, the renovation market should reach about $1,000 billion by 2025, with growth most pronounced in Asia and Europe. These figures underscore the growing trend of renovation in the property sector, both for its contribution to sustainability and its role in driving the buoyant global real estate market.

The trade fair for the luxury preloved sector

RELUXURY

LUXURY, BY ITS VERY NATURE, STANDS FOR DURABILITY. IT IS THE POLAR OPPOSITE OF ALL THAT IS SHORT-LIVED, CONSUMABLE AND DISPOSABLE, AND IT'S PRECISELY ITS PROMISE OF LONGEVITY THAT MAKES AN ITEM AN OBJECT OF DESIRE. AS JEAN-LOUIS DUMAS D'HERMÈS SAID: "LUXURY IS WHAT YOU CAN REPAIR."

A luxury item is a rare and precious thing, a symbol of know-how and design that is worthy of fame and continuity. ReLuxury was established to promote circularity in the luxury sector through the acts of reselling, restoring, upcycling, authentication and traceability. This trade fair is a unique event, inviting aficionados and collectors to discover, share and acquire rare, authenticated pieces and to receive a valuation of and resell luxury possessions.

The Pre-Loved Luxury Show also spotlights innovative start-ups, enterprises that offer a new and more sustainable approach to luxury. These initiatives champion the use of recycled materials, upcycling as well as new consumer practices like renting or repairing, thereby embodying a future where luxury and the circular economy coexist in harmony.

KEVIN GERMANIER
BY LAURENCE BENAÏM,
KEVIN GERMANIER, RELUXURY'S
GUEST OF HONOUR

A contributor to the Centre Pompidou's Traversing Appearances exhibition in 2024 and the costume designer for the closing ceremony of the Paris Olympic Games, Kevin Germanier continues on his dream-studded path to inspire and enchant us with this presentation of six models from his own collections (2022 to 2024), which he will showcase alongside accessories and furniture.

"Amidst a riotous cross-fading of pinks, blues and yellows, fusing the ethical and the imaginary, the opaque and the brilliant, from the 'Venimeuses' to the 'Désastreuses', his spring-summer 2025 collection, Germanier's world unfurls like a 3D film, a fantastical laboratory helmed by a genius of colour and emotion that bursts out into the world in every hue of the rainbow"

Laurence Benaïm

In Kevin Germanier's hands, the circular economy becomes playful, an example of a bedazzling and kaleidoscopic approach to sustainability. His "aliens" celebrate light in our age of recycling guided by a talent that combines haute couture and experimentation, craftsmanship and the jubilant recycling of waste produced by our consumer society: sequins, pearls, feathers, jewellery and the like... "You often hear that everything has been done before. Personally, I'm not so sure about that. Whether it has or not, I'm forever on the lookout for new avenues for inspiration. To understand the world, you have to explore things. Culture and art are a constant source of learning and inform my political and social thinking, too," explains Kevin Germanier.
